Joint Global Taskforce declaration at UN Summit warns Post-2015 Agenda will fail without local governments

"We, the local and regional leaders gathered in United Cities and Local Governments and the Global Taskforce of Local and Regional Governments, have been here this week to make everybody aware that the Sustainable Development Goals – all of them – are at the core of our work." Kadir Topbaş, Mayor of Istanbul and President of UCLG Local and regional governments from all over the world were at UN Headquarters in New York this weekend to witness the adoption of the Post-2015 Development Agenda. The Global Taskforce, facilitated by UCLG, organized a number of events to celebrate the occasion and to assess the role of cities and local leaders in the Post-2015 Agenda going forward. The Global Taskforce of Local and Regional Governments was set up in 2012 to bring together the major international networks of local and regional governments to work together on representing their constituents in the Post-2015 and Habitat III processes.

At an event on "Cities Driving Sustainable Development: Endorsing the SDGs and Committing to Their Implementation", organized by UNSDSN, the Campaign for an Urban SDG, the Global Taskforce and the New School, UN Secretary General, Ban Ki-moon, praised the work of the Global Taskforce over the last three years. In a statement, delivered by Executive Director of UN Habitat, Joan Clos, he underlined the importance of the Global Taskforce's joint strategy in advocating for the adoption of SDG 11 in the run up to the Habitat III Conference in Quito in October 2016.

The Mayor of Dakar, Khalifa Sall, pointed out that the SDGs are "a true revolution" because they are global and have been developed through wide consultation. "Until now global goals were defined without local governments, but the Post-2015 process has shown that we are able and ready to make this change," he said.

Over the course of the week, mayors from the delegation, including, among others, Mayor of Istanbul and President of UCLG, Kadir Topbaş, Mayor of Banda Aceh, Illiza Sa'aduddin Djamel, and Mayor of Kitchener, Berry Vrbanovic, highlighted the fact that the achievement of all of the 17 new Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) will depend on local governments.

All SDGs are Local: Towards an Action Agenda in Habitat III

The Global Taskforce made a joint declaration to mark the summit for the adoption of the Post-2015 Agenda, entitled: "All SDGs are Local: Towards an Action Agenda in Habitat III".

In the declaration, local and regional leaders commit to playing their part in the success of the Post-2015 Agenda and call for a new global governance system within a revitalized UN system. The declaration proposes greater participation in the UN for all stakeholders, and demands recognition of the unique democratic legitimacy of local governments in particular.

The declaration also celebrates the inclusion of SDG 11 on sustainable cities. The inclusion of Goal 11 was largely thanks to the advocacy work of the Global Taskforce and the broader urban community over the past year. As Celestine Ketcha Courtès, Mayor of Bagangté and UCLG Champion on Development and Cooperation pointed out, "we have tirelessly repeated in the UN and other international arenas that the risks of badly managed urbanization are underestimated."

Furthermore, the declaration highlights out the need for the 'localization' of all of the 17 SDGs. Localization refers to the decentralization of powers and resources to ensure their implementation and monitoring. Localization will be essential if local governments are to live up to their potential in making the goals a reality on the ground. As the Mayor of Bogota, Gustava Petro, said in New York, "technical solutions are the easy part of sustainable development policy-making. It is political decision-making and facing established interests that are preventing change that is more difficult. Communities need to drive the change."

As Mayor of Kitchener, and UCLG Deputy Treasurer, Berry Vrbanovic, said, "To see how far we have come together deserves a celebration. However, work still needs to be done, and the Second World Assembly of Local and Regional Governments needs to be our focus as we work towards Habitat III."
